29. ACADIAN-CAJUN@rootsweb.com , Internet."Francois Michel was apparently the first child born, after his Acadian parents had arrived and married at New Orleans, and had settled above present Convent. At the time of Francois' birth, neither the St. James Catholic Church, Ascension Catholic Church, nor the St. Michel Catholic Church had been established. St. Gabriel, Baton Rouge, and Pointe Coupee, and New Orleans were too far away from the area; never the less, if a baptism had been performed there, that record would appear in the published records of the Baton Rouge Diocese or New Orleans, which it doesn't. According to a report by Commandant Judice, in this time period, the area was being served by Father Barnabe of the German Coast, the church of St. Charles of the Germans, who periodically came to perform ceremonies in Judice's house. Barnabe's church was located around Taft, and was the parent church of the later St. Charles Catholic Church (Little Red Church) at Destrehan, and of the later church of St. John The Baptist at Edgard. If Francois Michel was baptized by Father Barnabe, this would have been recorded in the records of the German Coast church. Only one register of Father Barnabe's German Coast church has survived, and these earlier records are published in the New Orleans Archdiocese books. Later Barnabe registers burned in a fire at Destrehan. Additionally, if the baptism was later than 1766, and was after the St. James Church was established, (1768), the first pages of that register are missing. One possible suggestion to look into: Judice was sending reports of early marriages and baptisms, names and dates, done by Barnabe, to his superiors at New Orleans, and some of this data was published in Lillian Bourgeois' Cabanocey. I don't know if these official correspondences of Judice are included in Brasseaux' Quest. I don't have present access. It is possible these baptisms may have been performed by the pastor of the church of St Charles of the Germans on the German Coast and therefore recorded in the registers of this church. There is record of two Acadian baptisms for years 1767 and 1769 originally recorded in the St Charles registers and later copied to the St James Church registers in 1783. Unfortunately, except for a single register covering 1739-1755, the registers of St Charles of the Germans Church were burned in the rectory fire of 30 May 1877. The early church of St Charles was on the west bank and was re-established on the east bank near Destrehan about 1770.
